Marshall Pecore is the Forest Manager for Menominee Tribal Enterprises in Wisconsin, the Tribal organization responsible for forest management of the Tribal forest, since 1975. Marshall is married with 2 children and has a B.S. degree in forest management from Michigan Tech University. Throughout his career, he has been on a number of State and Native American organizations concerning forestry, and has written a number of articles for both professional publications and Native American magazines.

Join Marshall as we all share ideas and perspectives walking through a forest featuring various aged group selections and a variety of tree species and cohorts. The Blooming Valley Forest has been managed by FSF foresters since 1985 using a system of low intensity, high frequency thinnings and group openings.
